- (a) What is the condition of the villages with regard to health?
- (b) Why is water kept for a long time in rural households?
- (c) What are the diseases spread by polluted water?
- (d) Which type of vessels reduce the bacteria in the water?
- (e) Who is to be given the boiled water?

Clean water supply is essential for good health and cleanliness in the home. Often, the only source of drinking water is polluted. More than 70% of rural households have no safe drinking water. Their supplies are often carried some distance from a river pond or well or a community pump or tap. Carrying water takes time and energy. For these reasons, water is often kept in the house for a long time and if necessary, it is rationed carefully.

Several diseases are spread by polluted water. These include diarrhoea, cholera and typhoid. Families using water from uncovered ponds and wells are likely to suffer more frequently from all these infections than those whose water comes from protected sides. An adequate supply of water is also needed for personal cleanliness and general hygiene in the home. Health workers should encourage the provision of good household water supplies as much as possible.

If there is no tap, the main water container in the house must be kept clean, covered and free from debris. Overnight storage in the earthenware vessels reduces the number of bacteria in the water. Nevertheless, it is important that any water given to infants is first boiled. After boiling, it should be left covered in the same container until it is cool enough to drink.
